

Eugene T. Brown

Eugene Brown is an Associate with IMPACT Strategies. Eugene gained his passion for politics during his college years when he served as a congressional summer intern for the Committee on Homeland Security where Congressman Bennie G. Thompson (D-MS) was Chairman. Eugene interned in several different congressional offices before graduating from Livingstone College, including the Congressional Black Caucus (CBC) where he worked in the office of Congressman Emanuel Cleaver (D-MO).

While working at the CBC, Eugene developed and produced a luncheon and panel discussion for HBCU student government presidents and majority colleges' Black Student Union presidents came to the hill in order to engage Members of Congress and staffers about voter engagement, organizing around policy issues impacting communities of color, and access to Capitol Hill for the disenfranchised.

Eugene also served as a production assistant for several White House events after working with the Presidential Inauguration Committee's production team. A graduate of Livingstone College in North Carolina, he served in several student leadership roles including student government, NAACP, and the Ralph Bunche Society.
